DWARF FRUIT TREES

DWARF APPLE — On Malling IX Root.

Grows to 8 to 10 feet. Small size and early bearing make this type very desirable for home yard use. Can be planted 12 feet apart on the square without crowding growth. Also has been planted commercially about 4 feet apart in hedgerows.

Research work on Dwarf and Semi-Dwarf Apple has been carried on for the last ten years, and the supply of trees for commercial orchard planting has increased gradually.

Malling understocks, although still very limited, are now being produced in larger quantities each year.

Information regarding the trees and the understocks will be passed on to the nursery trade as it becomes available to us.

Dwarf stock withstood the freeze of last November as well, and in some cases better than Standard Fruit Trees.

AZALEA

As a result of the freeze last Fall, the supply of Evergreen Azaleas is below normal and rather uncertain. However, Glenn Dale and Gable varieties will be one year older than supplied in the past and should make heavier plants even though the grades will be small. Kaempferi Hybrids were more severely damaged, and recovery is uncertain at this time. Most Standard varieties are in fair supply with the exception of Hinodegiri and Hexe which are extremely short. A favorable growing season could change this survey materially, and the supply may be better than now anticipated.

The letters and numbers preceding the variety name denote hardiness as given by Koster Nurseries, Bridgeton, N. J., who are large growers of Azaleas, and these ratings are borne out by experience of local growers. The ratings are based upon minimum temperatures which varieties may be expected to stand with no appreciable damage to leaf, stem or bud of established mature plants. They are as follows:

H-1—(Hardy to 25° F. below zero.) H-3—(Hardy to 5° F. below zero.)
H-2—(Hardy to 15° F. below zero.) H-4—(Hardy to 5° F. above zero.)
First year plants should be rated one rating lower.

CAMELLIA

As a result of the freeze last Fall, the supply of Camellias will be limited to the smaller grades in balled stock, and for the most part will be container material both local-grown and California-grown stock. There will be some specimen plants, but the supply is not certain enough at this time to warrant listing.

Later in the Summer when we should know definitely how stock has recovered and just what will be available in the various varieties in budded plants, we will make up a list which will be sent on request.

RHODODENDRONS

We expect to have a good supply of Rhododendrons, and, as in the past, intend to supply liberal grades and top quality, budded plants to every customer. Most varieties are cutting grown.

Letters and numbers preceding variety names indicate relative hardiness. (H-1—hardest through H-5—most tender; H-1—probably hardy as far north as Southern New England and Southern New York; H-5 only recommended for warmer climates and Western Oregon and Washington. We consider all of the Rhododendrons listed hardy in California with the exception of the northern inland portion of the State.

PORTLAND ROSES

The roses we offer are all grown near Portland in good, sandy, loam soil, without irrigation, thus securing a particularly fine root system and firm, well-ripened wood. The stock is usually ready for shipment by December 1. A favorable growing season seems to indicate excellent quality for this year.

CONTAINER STOCK

We now have available to us a fairly complete assortment of Container Material, and it seems likely that we will soon be listing a complete assortment of this stock in our general catalog, but for the present are only listing those varieties which we have available now for Summer and early Fall planting.

As production increases, a definite price schedule will be established. In the meantime we shall depend on special lists, which will be sent out as often as possible to our customers here in the Pacific Northwest.

One gallon cans containing 1-year and 2-year plants will average about $.75.

Two gallon cans containing 2-year and 3-year plants will run from $1.25 to $1.50.

Three gallon cans containing 3-year and 4-year plants will run from $1.75 to $2.25.

When properly grown, material in the two, three and five gallon containers should equal in quality the field grown stock that is handled B&B.

Retailers, Roadside Stands and most other outlets are finding container stock easier to handle and care for. The selling season can, with the use of container material, be extended through the entire Summer. Shipping problems are being quite readily solved as we come to them, and transportation charges are in some cases less than for B&B material.

Deciduous Stock from the field, if put in containers during the Winter, is well established and ready to sell during the late Spring and Summer.

Losses are usually less in Container Material than in Bare Root or even Balled Stock. A careful schedule of watering and fertilizing must be adhered to. Experience is necessary, and with us there is much to be learned about the growing, selling and shipping of container nursery stock. If interested, write us, and we will send what information we have.

The following stock is on hand in our salesyard now and can be shipped immediately on receipt of order during the Summer and early Fall.

MONEY AND OLD AGE

Many years ago when saving money for old age was considered a virtue, a story was told about an old man and a young man who were having dinner together.

The young man was the host and he spent $10 during the evening. The old man reproved him for his extravagance, explaining that when a young man tossed away $10 it was like an old man tossing away $100 because to a young man money is capital, whereas to an old man it is just currency. But another version of this is possible.

This year an attorney, a friend of ours, was awarded a fee of $25,000 by a probate judge for work done in a case. The attorney was in his seventy-third year, so my reaction was that at his age $25,000 was as good today as twice the sum would be to a man half his age.

I suggested to the attorney that with the proceeds, after taxes, he could buy an annuity that would give him a nice monthly income. To an old man money may be merely currency, but with dwindling energy and earning power, it is a life-buoy. The older you are, the more annuity you receive for your money.
